Record Snowfall Across Japan To Affect Domestic Travel and Transport

Snowfall has covered Tokyo in record amounts not seen since 2014, affecting business and travel in Japan's capital. The Japan Meteorological Agency reports that snow will continue to fall throughout parts of the country overnight, reaching up to 30 cm (11.8 in) in certain regions. As a result, inland truck and rail transportation may be delayed, and a number of domestic flights have been delayed or cancelled in the Tokyo Narita and Tokyo Haneda airports.

As a result of this inclement weather, KWE's Tokyo office may experience delays in service until the low atmospheric pressure system recedes, which is forecasted for Saturday.

For pressing inquiries and updates, please reach your local KWE branch for information.
